Company Description:

Over the past 5 years, American Airlines has invested billions of dollars in new aircraft, technology, infrastructure and most importantly, in our employees. We've built the largest airline in the world and are generating record-breaking profits, but we're just getting started. We're transforming our culture by focusing on validating the trust placed in us by our frontline team members and have broken ground on a brand new integrated campus.

With the bulk of our integration behind us, we are focused on planning for the long-term and enhancing customer experience and shareholder value. That includes hiring MBAs to work on meaningful assignments to support the company's pursuit of greatness and to ultimately become the next generation of leaders at American. American's Management Leadership Pipeline has for 30 years been the training ground for many leaders in the airline industry. In fact, the past three CEOs at American got their start as new hires in American's MBA Pipeline, as did the current CEO at Virgin Atlantic and countless executives at other Fortune 500 companies
